In re the Adkins article: I believe he is right in suspecting "Jungle Murders" was not written entirely by Burroughs. Back in Sept. 28, 1957 I attended a dinner in Paterson, N. J. in honor of Frank R. Paul Leo Margulies who had been the publisher of "Thrilling Adventures", was there also, During the after dinner conversation the talk drifted around to Burroughs. Margulies told a group of us, which included Vern Coriell and Sam Moskowitz that when Burroughs submitted "Jungle Murders" he found it "hopeless". He had Sam Mines completely re-write it. He told this story on another occasion at a dinner table after an ESFA meeting. My guess is that Mines threw away ERB's writing, kept the plot, and the story as it stands now is probably almost entirely Mines. When I knew that Lupoff was writing his book I wrote to him and asked him to comfirm this story from Margulies and try to get Burroughs own version to print in "Castaways" no matter how "hopeless" the writing. Failing this, if he did print the Mines version he should inform the reader of the fact. I never heard from him, so he apparently didn't follow through, and went ahead and published the "Thrilling Adventures" version,

Anybody really interested could check this, Margulies and Mines are still around. — Allan Howard

Ed #31 was a very pleasant issue, Things that run in installments, like "Lost Cities of Tarzan" are especially good for this format, This and the "Barsoom Glossary" will be a nice collection when finished.

The illos were well planned again, as they matched the two main articles in the issue. Frolich does reasonably good work, but Sam Grainger is a great plus. His Tarzan-Opar was gorgeous. Hanck's Opar scene provided a very good closeup contrasting the breathlaking distant view that Grainger gave us.

ALL-SIORT CAVALLER MEDA, out in the interim compiler Bill Clark lost part of his notes. However, I already have a good start of information, and need only a few dozen pre-1915 issues to be checked. Can anyone help? -C. "Caz" Cazedessus, Jr.

Late in TARZAN THE UNTAMED, the Apeman, along with Lieut, Smith-Oldwick and Bertha Kircher, is lost in a desolate wasteland cut with numerous deep gorges, somewhere in the far southwest corner of German East Africa. They stumble into a narrow fertile valley, within which lies the walled city of Xuja, surrounded by its irrivated farms.

Behind a well constructed 30-foot wall was a city of mostly two-story buildings with the second floor protruding, thus forming an arcade. The streets between were paved in bright mosaics, but without mortar, in the centre of the city was a building of several stories, with winding starrs and great chambers. Its walls beer namer as a superstanding the second of the city was supported by the second of the control of the cont

Bertha is captured and imprisoned with an English woman who had been a slave there in Nuja for sixty years. She learns that the city has had no contact with the outside world in the last 1,000 years, except for this unfortunate woman and a leger dary Spanish giant who excaped but died a dayls travel from the valley. Isolated and interbred for generations, the eather such a state of the state

The people of this valley are yellew skined, but their alphabet is rominiscent of the Greek. Other than this brief statement no clue as to their identity or origin is given. They are bird worshippers, the parrol being their chief deity, and they are able to converse with the parrols just as Targan talks with the aper.

Many questions come to mind concerning the Valley of Luan where did its founders come from? Who was the old English woman, and what eventually happened to her? Possibly the son of an English 'Tommy' will go there some day and clear up this mystery.

*NOTE: Xuja is pronounced hoo-ja like xurel, a saurel or horse mackcrel. (Or like Hooja the Sly One, of Pellucidar)

HOUSE OF INFO

Ballantine Books has ussued six new Ballantines (nos. 7-12) with new cover art by Robert Abett. This is the second or third printing for these titles, dated October, 1969. The art is very good, with the painting for TU a real masterpiece.

TV 21 (new series reported in Ed #31) continues with its weekly 2 page Tarzan strip, although issues 7,23 & 25 omit the Ape Man. The art is by at least 3 (unknown) artists, with remarkably good pen work in nos. 8,12,13 & 16, rather poor in #14 and a color Tarzan cover on #6. Story line is generaly African natives and white poachers, featuring talking leopard(#8) and hippo (#11), and an out-spoken Tarzan ("Skulking Jackal", "Yes, Dog. . . ", " . . scum!") and new ape talk ("Yeecoow!, Raah! Graah! #15). The first issue is dated Sept. 27,1969 and subscriptions or back issues might be available from Century 21 Pub. Ltd., Aldwych House, London, W. C. 2, England.

Bill Dutcher discovered and reported some new Hong Kong Tarzan figures, 3 to a card with native, Boy, monkey and baby elephant. Obviously unauthorized, the background drawing is from an old Dell Tarzan cover, #128, Jan-Feb, 1962. Gold Key has issued a new Tarzan Golden Comies Digest, March, 1707 (.o., 'in a general OK series; No. 4, Aug. 1969 was also Tarzan) with Russ Manning's complete 3 part versions of IJO from CK Taran zan issues nos. 189-181. There are several other stories of Korak, Tarzan, Bros. of Spear by Russ, and the late Jesse Marsh, plus a couple of new stories never before published. Price is 50¢ and well worth it.

Esquire, April, 1970 has a fold-out front cover of Johnny Weissmuller (in coat kite) with Maureen O'Sullivan and chimp, that reads "Tarana and other heroes come back once more"; and Argosy, April, 1970 has a cover photo of a Brazilian white man living in the jungle that reads "Found; A Real-Life Modern Tarana". But both inside stories have little relation to the real creation.

Chicago History, Spring 1970 (pub by Chi. Historical Soc., N.Ave. & Clark, C. III. 60614) has an excellent article "Tarzan Was Born in Chicago" by John L Tucker, that points out that Tarzan, RRB, J. Allen St. John and Johns Weissmuller were all Chicago boys. It is a long 14 page article, with photos and other info courteay of Stan Vinson's collection.

Surely the most unique item ever reported in this column is the existance of a small gasoline engine made in 1938 called the Tarzan 50. It was one of about 50 made by a Tony Grish, and is now in the collection of Bruse Underwood GROUND FLIER, The principal means of transportation in the cities of Okar. It has broad tires filled with the Eighth Ray, containing just sufficient buoyancy to give traction for steering purposes. The vehicles are used only on the streets of the cities which are seeded with the ochre, mosslike vegetation which grows on the dead-sea bottoms, A similar vehicle, used by the red men, differs in the ability to pass over other vehicles. It seems strange to note that nowhere have I seem or heard mention of a novel that is so like Edgar Rice Burroughs' books as to be a prime candidate for a source. The story is DICK BROADHEAD, and the author is none other that P. T. Barnum'

Although my copy is dated 1901, it is copyrighted for 1888 and published by the G. W. Dillingham Co., New York. Mr. Bernum lived a brilliant eastance, and although I can find mention of at least two difference materials, his adventure novels seem to be gennerally overlooked. In addition to BlOODHEAD, the dijvelest lists two other books, LION JACK and JACK IN TIEL JUNGLE, both 'marvellous Stories' of the president of the presence of the presen

The story opens with P. T. Barnum entertaining a young man, Dan Mannering, at a showing of his great circus at Madison Square Gardens. This in itself is simllar to Burroughs manner of personally bringing himself into the opening or Forward of a tale, and the way in which Barnum goes on to present a trapeze artist to the eyes of Mannering and weave the opening threads of the novel, also parallels Burroughs.

As they watch Richard Broadhead in his act, Mannering relates how his older brother, also possessing the surname Broadhead from his mother's first marriage, disappeared before young Dan's birth. They believed him to have been kidnapped, and for several years his parents put forth much money and effort to find him, to no avail.

On snquiring about the performer before them, Dan secure Barnum's promise that he will relate the entire astonishing story of the artist's adventures in Africa, where he was found by one of Barnum's expeditions in search of rare oddities and wild animals. Sometime later, this promise is honored, and thus we have the narrative of Dick Broadhead's perilous adventures, through Mr. Barnum.

Dick was shipwrecked on the coast of Benguela in Southern Africa at the age of fourteen. Merely through a whim of Fate the lad attains the shore, being both strong and athletic. Here he rests, the only survivor and marconed on the inhospitable Dark Continent; he spends a haggard night contemplating the dangers ahead of him, and in the morning is surprised to find accessible condition. He swims out and manages to salvage a rifle and ammunition, matches, and some canned goods.

That night he has an unpleasant experience with lions, that circle in the darkness beyond the light of his campfire. When it burns low, he is forced to make pigrimages with only an axe and a burning brand in search of more fule. At last morning arrives, and he resolves to construct a raft on which he can sleep at night.

In the after moon two mattives burst out upon him, and misconstruing them to be cannibals, he attempts to seache on the raft. One of the blacks departs, apparently in quest of reinforcements, and so it is with great relief that he finds not wild savages, but two white men coming in pursuit. They greet him as the heads of a Barnum expedition seeking wild beasts and the same of the same present of the sam

The men introduce themselves as Frank Griswold and Hiram Canter, and later in the evening as they are relaxing in camp with Broadhead, the camp is startled by the attack of a lion that bounds in and seizes one of the blacks (a very typical Burroughs scene). During the following few days, Dick is snatched up by a mad Elenbart, and then tossed bids, but to the air.

Fortunately, he lands in a cushioning jungle
bush (remember Tarzan's fall in APES?).

The party is surrounded by a hostile tribe, conjectured to be a far northern remnant of the original Zulu bands, and is forced on a treak up into the mountains. The village of their captors is situated in a well-protectle ravine. Broadhead and Griswold, kept in the same hut, decide to escape, and undo their bonds and sneak into the night, intending to return later for Carter and the staunch Kaffir. Jingo.

The man turns out to be Norman Vincent, who was captured three years before by Arab slave dealers. He carries a bow, is dressed strangely in a combination of native garments and breast shield, and wears a feathered cap over his golden cuttle. He leads them away, but it is not long before the natives give pursuit. They are trapped in an old blockade, and just as the savages are about to burst in Vincent leads the man away through an underground pasage. (By this time, you may have noticed, the plot is very Burroughsian!)

Norman tells them of the sacred Cavern of Gurani perhans a dozen miles off, and they make for it, seeking to clude the many search parties out for them. Dick makes it within just ahead of a scouting party that has discovered them, and in the dark interior of the cavern stumbles over the edge of a deep abyss. The blacks do not dare enter the sacred cave, but believe that the demon "Gurani" will nunish them.

Dick lands on a ledge twenty feet below, narrowly avoiding plunging to his doom. He and Griswold are very surprised to find Hiram Carter and Jingo there, and like coincidence is explained by the fact that Carter and Jingo also exapped from the control of the control by ellipse for the "demon", then set out to find a way from the cave.

After following treacherous passages for hours, they come upon a large hollow in the mountain: an enormous idol constructed of wood and stone sits in the center of this chamber. "Probably the dim vault where the travelers now stood had long ago resounded with the weird and awful rites of the dermo worship common among the native tribes of the Dark Continent."

In constructing torches to light their way on through the dark passage, the great idol is accidentally get afire. The men push on, and find that the passage terminates high on the sheer face of a cliff, 500 feet above a green and level country, but are unable to descend from this point. They retrace their tracks to an underground river and construct a raft, risking a journey on the swift waters in preferance to remaining in the caverns and starving.

They traverse the river successfully, and come out of the mountain to plunge over a ten foot waterfall. The entire even the successful to the successful to the successful to the successful, but are captured by "an army of ebon warriors," the Katendis. But just at that instant, smoke from the burning idol deep in the mountain issues from an opening high above them on the cliff, and they persuade the Katendis that they are magical.

In the pages that follow, the band undergoes several adventures, including Dick facing an enemy war chief in combat to determine the result of a native war. The last portion of the book is occupied with a peril-fraught journey down the river, in a native cance, with periodic encounters with vengeful savages.

At last they execute a very narrow escape from the pursuing natives, and are reacued by a steamer proceeding on an exploring mission. Barnum finishes his story to young Dan Mannering here, and the latter expresses wishes to meet Dick Broadhead; he scarcely dares admit any hope that this adventurous man is his long iost older half-brother.

long lost older halt-brother. Braum calls the man to his apartments, questions him on his sorlier life, and determines that he could, indeed be the baby kidnapped some twenty-one years previously. Broadhead tells of enduring a wretched boyhood in London, and then of attempting to solve the mystery of his parentage by undertaking several voyages about the world.

Dan Mannering confirms the fact by noting an acid mark on the hand of Broadhead, which was effected by the carelessness of a nurse in his infanthood. The mystery is solved after twenty years of sorrowful perplexity.

The style of this exciting book is so directly parallel to the works of Edgar Rice Burroughs as to be astounding. And although Dick Broadhead never sheds his garments to go racing through the tree tops, the narrative is very readable and immensely enjoushle. For those of you interested in source material for ERB, this is a must.
